Introduction to the Great Fire of London

What Was the Great Fire of London?

The Great Fire of London was a massive blaze that swept through the City of London from September 2 to September 6, 1666. It started in a bakery on Pudding Lane and quickly spread due to the wooden buildings, narrow streets, and dry weather. The fire destroyed much of the city, including thousands of homes, businesses, and important structures like St. Paul's Cathedral.

Why Did the Fire Spread So Quickly?

Several factors contributed to the rapid spread of the fire: - The city's architecture primarily consisted of wooden buildings and thatched roofs. - Narrow, winding streets made it difficult for firefighters and water buckets to reach the flames. - The dry summer conditions created ideal circumstances for a fire to ignite and spread. - Lack of organized firefighting services; most efforts relied on bucket brigades and early fire engines.
